Walk through the sere and faded wood, Walk through the sere and faded wood,
So lightly trodden by your feet,
When all you knew of life was good,
And all you dreamed of life was sweet;
And let fond memory lead you back
O'er youthful love's enchanted track.

Taste the ripe fruit of orchard boughs,
Drink from the mossy well once more,
Breathe fragrance from the crowded mows
With fresh, sweet clover running o'er; And count the treasures at your feet Of silver rye and golden wheat. Go sit beside the bearth again,

Mhose circle once was glad and gay;
And if from out the precious chain
Some shining links have passed away,
Then guard with tender heart and hand The remnant of thy household band.

Draw near the board with plenty spread,
And if in the accustomed place
You see your father's reverened head,
Or mother's patient, loving face,
Whate'er your life may have of ill,
Thank God that these are left you still!

And though where home bath been, you stand To-day in alien loneliness;

hough you may clasp no brother's hand, And claim no sister's tender kiss; Though with no friends nor lover nigh, The past is all your company— Thank God for friends your life has known,

For every dear departed day; The blessed past is safe alone— God gives but does not take away; He only safely keeps above For us the tressures that we love.

A Struggle with a Devil-Fish.

Mr. Charles Brainard, of Boston, in writing to the Scientific American about specimens of the devil-fish, relates this interesting incident: The strength which these creatures possess is almost beyond comprehension, as is evidenced by what took place when my pet (?) was captured. He had seized held of a submarine diver, at work in the wreck of a sunken steamer off the coast of Florida. The man was a pow-rful Irishman, who claimed to weigh :00 pounds. His size and build fully verified his statement, and, to use his own language, the "baste landed on my shoulders and pinned my arms tight. It telt my armor and myself being cracked i ito a jelly." It seems that he was juit about being brought to the surface, else the monster would have killed him, for he was suffering so from the terrible em brace that he could move no part of himself. When dragged on the raft from which he had descended, and finally released, he had fainted. The men on the raft seized the fish by one of its wriggling arms and tried to pull it off, but could not break the power of a single one of the suckers. The fish was only removed by being dealt a heavy blow across the sack containing the stomach. This sack stood stiffly up above the eyes, and gleamed like fire. The monster is all in all, one of the most frightful apparitions it could be the fate of man to mee' It fulfils in every particular the horrible features attributed to it in Victor Hugo's "Toilers of the Sea. Notwithstanding the severity with which the able Frenchan has been criticised for "creating nondescript with his weird imagination, the truth must be granted that his "nondescript" has an actual existence, as is evidenced by the specimens in Brighton and Hamburgh, as well as my own. Filthy Lucre.

"There's no such thing as money in his country?" was the exclamation of an Englishman a few years ago after a brief sojourn in New York.

It happened in this way: The Englishman, in the course of his business, found it necessary to obtain an advance on some merchandise. He made the usual arrangement with a large commercial house to accommodate him. On going to consumate it and re-ceive the cash, he was a good deal surprised when, in lieu of it, the senior member tendered to him the acceptance of the firm, payable at ninety day' date. "What am I to do with this?" he inquired, take it to B. B. & Co" (naming some well-known bankers) was the reply. "They will give you the money at the legal rate." The English-man did as directed. He met with no difficulty. The paper was acceptable, and although our hero did not touch the cash, he received a check for the proper amount on a neighboring bank. Thither he repaired in full confidence of having something tangible. He was mistaken. The individual of the bank to whom he handed the check for payment, seized it nervously, and in a rapid, incoherent manner scrawled some hieroglyphies on its face, and thrust it back into the hands of the astonished owner, motioning at the same time to stand aside for the next comer. The check had been duly "certified." That was what the scrawl across its face meant. In a state of suspense and anxiety the Englishman betook himself to the person to whom he was indebted, and timidly exhibited what he had to offer. To his surprise his friend's countenance brightened, "Many thanks!" he exclaimed. "By the way this amount is too large; there will be something over a hundred dollars coming to you," and he proceeded to fill a check for it. The Englishman groaned in spirit. It was only another "piece of paper." And then exclaimed, "There is no such thing as money in this country." THE "SHOPPING OF TURKISH LADIES. Orders have been assued from the Minis try of Police, says the Levant Herald, renewing prohibition against Turkish ladies entering shops for the purpose of making purchases, whether the shops be kept by Turks or Christians. The prohibition was first issued at the beginning of the present Sultan's reign but has for some time past been allowed to fall into disuse. It is now formally renew-ed in a communication addressed to the foreign legations, and a direct order to Mussulman shopkeepers, and Turkish women must for the future make all their purchases from their carriages, as the majority of the better classes do at present, or, where they have no carri-ages, at shops doors or windows.

A Rhode Island jury were five days debating on a log case theolving seven-dollars, and then recommended both men to the merey of the court.
